Reinventing Flexible Workspaces in a Dynamic World Order

India Edition

Reinventing Flexible Workspaces in a Dynamic World Order

Over the years, commercial office space around the world has witnessed several structural changes in the wake of rising rents and changing occupier preferences, including the adoption of open plan offices and the rising need for collaboration. The transformation in recent years has been swifter and real estate decisions have become increasingly critical in the decision-making process of businesses.

The beginning of the new decade, shaped by the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic is expected to herald an altered era of continuously dynamic commercial real estate including flexible workspace requirements.

Workspaces are more likely to focus on three key aspects:

(1) Flexibility (2) Accelerated technology adoption and (3) Wellness

Flexibility

The flexibility to scale up or down as per business requirements is of paramount importance

Technology

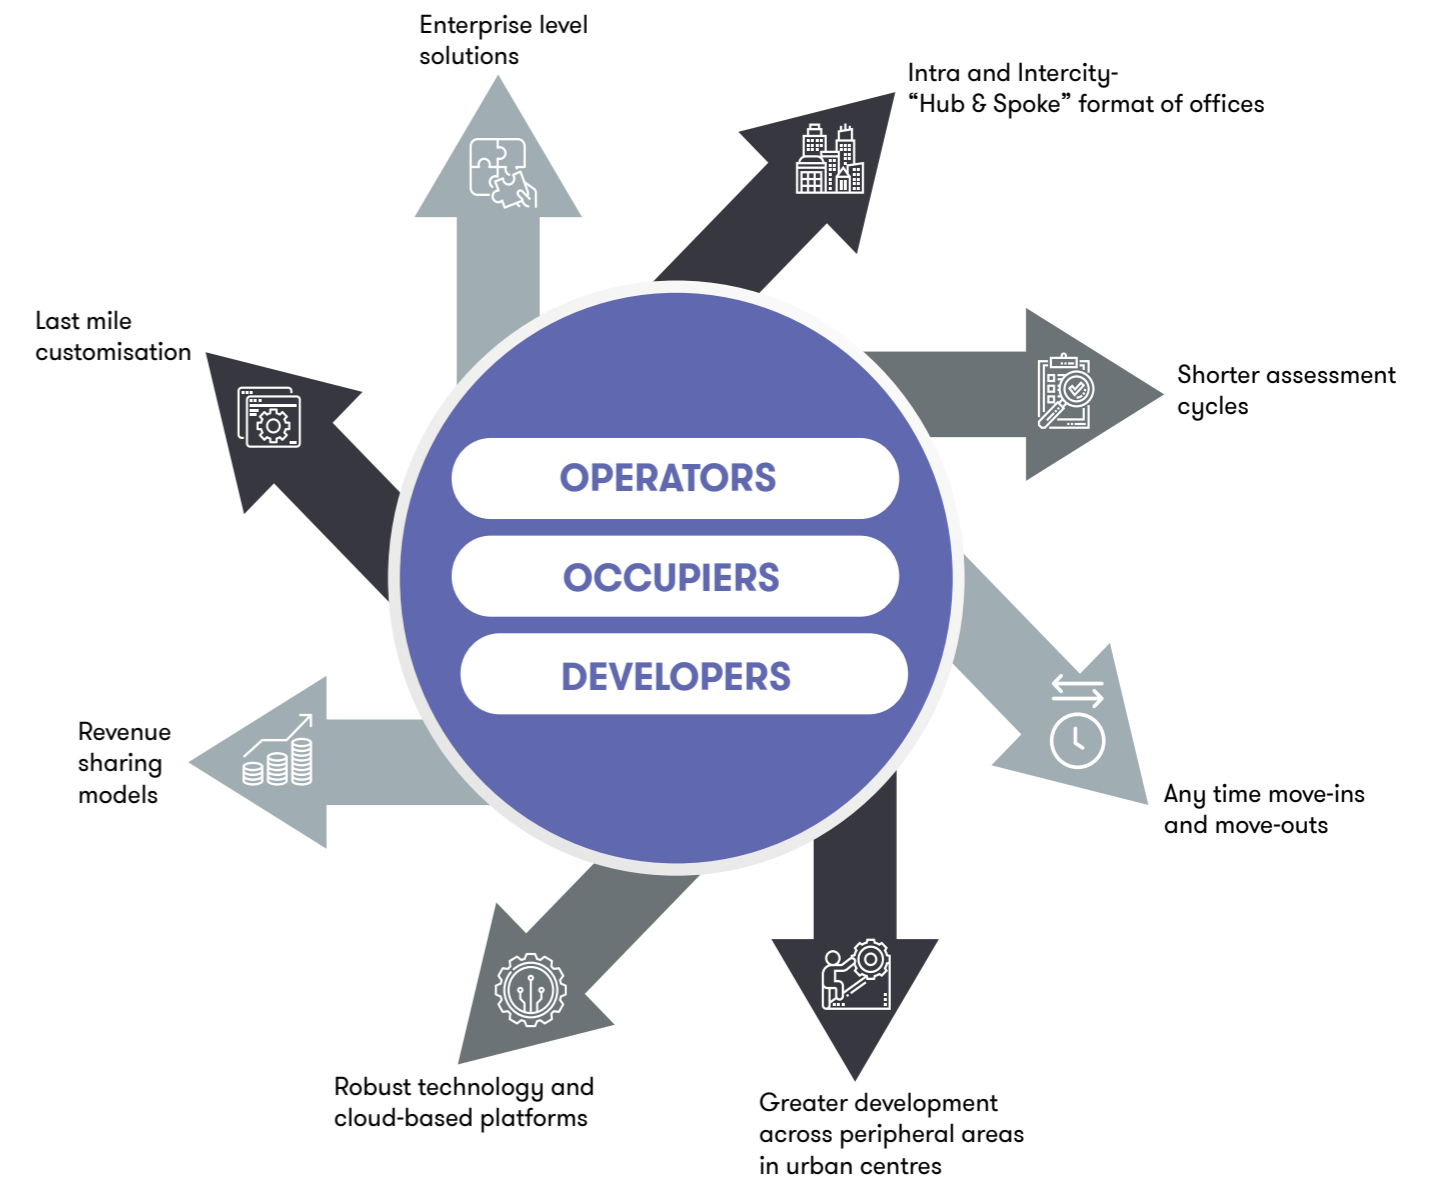

As some businesses continue to work remotely while others return to office in a phased manner, the process of digitisation is accelerated

Wellness

Employee health and wellness aspects and adherence to social distancing guidelines are key factors while finalising office spaces

Flexible Space Stakeholders Continue to Reinvent Themselves

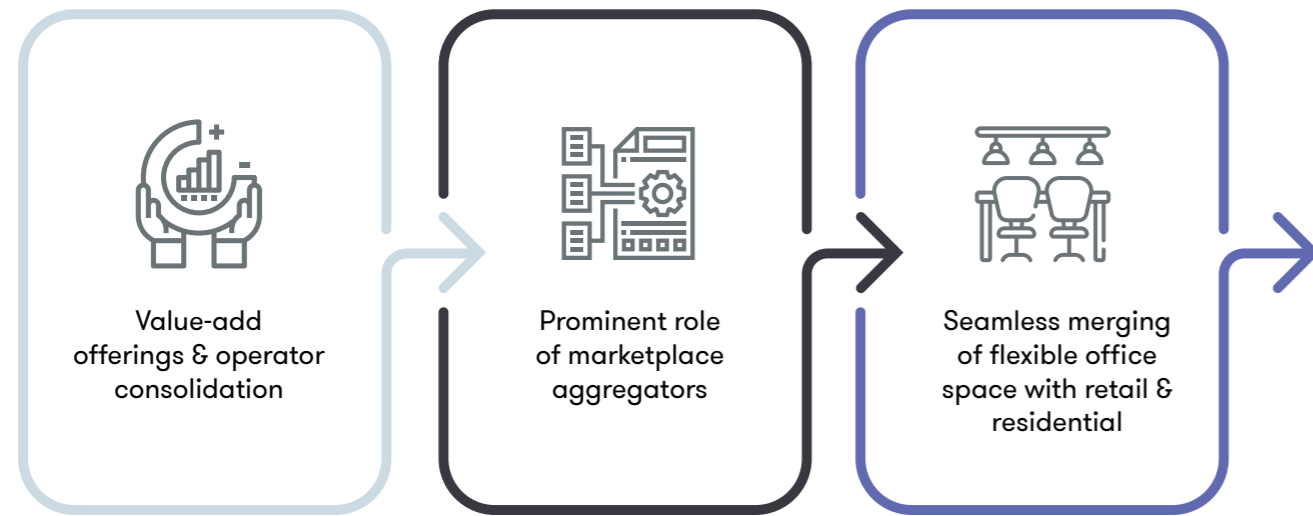

While, without a doubt, one must acknowledge that the ongoing pandemic has induced major resets in the flexible workspace domain, one must also simultaneously consider the inherent strengths of the sector. The sector is expected to reimagine and reposition itself stronger on other side of the pandemic. Marketplace platforms, value-add services and seamless blending with other real estate verticals are likely to be major contributors to the revival story in 2021 and beyond.
